
An online university masters degree is appreciated by employers

By Nic Haffner

Thousands of students apply everyday to obtain an online university masters degree. These students never meet a teacher, or ever sit in a class-room in their entire online university masters degree program. As a matter of fact, in some cases they are not even in the country. Long distance has got a whole different meaning. A student can be half way around the globe, and still go through the same online university masters degree as someone does locally.

The US congress passed a federal law within the last few years, which drops the requirement that colleges or universities offer at least half of its courses to be done in person or face to face with a teacher in order to receive federal student aid. This new law will attract more students and colleges to follow the online path.

Here are some pretty surprising facts and statistics regarding an online university masters degree:

- A report from a study shows that 65% of schools that have daily traditional classes also offer online courses, that includes an online university masters degree.
- Online registration took a serious high from 1.98 million in 2003 to 2.35 million the following year according to Eduventures, a Boston company that studies the trends of education.
- Also predicted by the same company is that by 2008, roughly 1 in 10 college students will be doing an online degree program.

For many years it has been predicted that an online education would increase year by year.

Famous universities like for Stanford offer online university masters degree programs in various sciences, even with most other elite education institutions looking down upon online education.

Some of the critics were quick to say that an online university masters degree programs, or similar programs for that matter, does not give a student the enriching intellectual reciprocation that traditional programs do. The critics also emphasized the high rate of fraud going on with online educational institutions.

Whilst most educators seem to agree that an online university master degree is not for the young learners who have not developed self discipline, which is definitely needed in courses like these, they insist that online education programs are the best way not to give up on studies because one has passed the college age or because one does not have the time to attend traditional classes.

So, to answer the question, what kind of students graduates by using an online university masters degree? It is those students that are not willing to give up on higher education and self development or improvement. Online university masters degree programs will give additional value to you and your life from wherever you do it.

Nic Haffner likes to give this readers information about getting education online for example how to take accredited degrees online.

Article Source: http://EzineArticles.com/?expert=Nic_Haffner

EzineArticles.com